10 wooden beds extended from the entrance 15 meters into the tunnel. The rest of the tunnel contained rooms for the doctors and the nurses. Five meters west of the tunnel was a thatched-roof house, 10 meters long and 4 meters wide, which served as a dining room and as a billet for the doctors and nurses.

- 5. The hospital staff included 20 nurses and 6 doctors. The chief doctor was a lieutenant colonel and the other five were lieutenants and captains. All were attached to the Interior Bureau.
- 6. The hospital cared only for policemen and members of the North Korean army and of provincial security units. Most of the patients were troops who had been wounded or injured in accidents. Each patient received 800 grams of rice, side dishes, and 30 grams of oil daily. Cases too serious for treatment at the hospital were sent to an Interior Ministry hospital near Plyongyang.
